

Know Your Rights!

A quick guide for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender high school students

Why? Lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) students often face discrimination and harassment in their schools. Unfortunately, many school officials know very little about how the law requires them to protect LGBT students. Sometimes they do know that they're breaking the law but hope that students won't question them when they do. That's why it's so important for you to educate yourself about your legal rights and what you can do if your school isn't treating you fairly!

Harassment

Anti-gay harassment is one of the most pervasive, frightening, and potentially damaging threats LGBT students face in our public schools. If you're being bullied, called names, threatened, or physically harmed at your school because of your sexual orientation, you don't have to take it! Public schools are required under federal law to remedy the abuse of lesbian and gay students.

The most important thing for you to do if anyone at school is harassing you is to report it to your principal or counselor. If the school doesn't do anything to protect you, then it has been put on notice and can be held legally responsible. Keep a record of each time you were harassed - what happened, when it happened, who was involved, and to whom you reported it.

If you've reported harassment to your school and they've done little or nothing to stop it, you should contact your local ACLU affiliate or the ACLU's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Project.

Privacy

Your school does NOT have the right to "out" you to anyone without your permission.

To do this to a young person can have tragic consequences, such as when police officers in 1997 told a young man in Pennsylvania that they were going to tell his family he was gay. He committed suicide rather than face what he feared would be rejection from his family. His mother sued, and a federal appeals court has held that threatening to disclose private information violated the teenager's Constitutional right to privacy. This applies to schools, too.

If a teacher, counselor, or any other school official threatens to tell your parents or anyone else that you're gay and you don't want them to, make it clear that this is against your wishes. If they still do it or threaten to do so, you should contact your local ACLU affiliate or the ACLU's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Project.

Freedom of Speech

Sometimes schools try to silence students who are open about their sexual orientation. But you have a Constitutional right to be out of the closet at school if you want to be. Sometimes schools punish students for talking about being gay. Sometimes schools censor students for wearing gay-themed t-shirts, even when the shirts aren't obscene and other students are allowed to wear t-shirts expressing their views on political or cultural issues.

In Tinker v. Des Moines, over 30 years ago, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that students don't "shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech at the schoolhouse gate." The Court went on to say that the only time a school can restrict an individual student's speech is when it causes significant disruption in the classroom. For example, standing up and yelling, "I'm gay!" in the middle of English class isn't okay, but talking with a friend at school about being gay between classes or at lunch is. And if your school's dress code allows other students to wear t-shirts about their beliefs, then it's illegal for them to ask you to take off your t-shirt just because it has a rainbow or says something about gay pride.

If your school is trying to keep you from talking about your sexual orientation or expressing your beliefs about it, you should contact your local ACLU affiliate or the ACLU's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Project.

Gay-Straight Alliances

Gay-Straight Alliances (GSA's) are student clubs, just like Drama Club or Key Club, that allow students with a common interest to get together and have discussions or activities about that interest. GSA's are made up of students of any sexual orientation, not just gay kids. They can be support groups, or they can be educational or
